“ Randy was one of the best floor men I have ever known. He got it honest because his father taught flooring installation at Macon Tech. Rand had ever certifications you could get and whenever I came across an impossible flooring installation I'll call Randy. He worked on many of flooring projects for me over the years with no complaints. As others have said he never met a stranger and I hope his family know how talented he was. He was my friend. “ My deddy loved anything outdoors. Fishing, hunting, exploring for arrowheads or old headstones lost to time. Riding down old dirt roads listening to good tunes and reminiscing about fond times was a hobby of his, as well.

He would take me around looking at old houses and to nature reserves just to admire and teach me what he knew about it all. I'll always appreciate that about him as I have inherited his appreciation for nature.

In his down time, I remember, he would doodle little bits of art on whatever paperwork he was dealing with and the art was actually decent! We would sit and draw out blueprints of how we would build future homes for ourselves and discuss how to go about building certain things. I would like to believe that he would think about his deddy teaching him about the same things whilst tutoring me.

We used to go on picnics on some weekends which is where I gained the nickname, 'boo' because I'm the booboo to his Yogi and "we got'a pic-a-nic basket." 💜. When we would get home we would watch whatever movie we rented on the way into town and talk about it afterwards. Our Sundays together were spent watching CBS Sunday morning and reflecting on the good things that had occurred during the previous week and all the good to come. When the mood struck him he would sing and I would just listen.

Especially when he sang about his mamma.

I'll miss how his whole body laughed when he was truly tickled and how, no matter what, he would always wish me a 'goodnight sweet dreams I love you'.

Well,

Goodnight, sleeptight, I love you, too, deddy.

Always and forever, boo
